New OWIT International Website: Have You Completed Your Profile?

If you are a current member of an OWIT chapter, you are now invited to log in and add your profile at http://www.owit.org

With 1759 active members listed in the Member Directory, imagine the networking power if we all complete our profiles.

Existing members can do this by checking back to the email sent earlier this year or by using the "Forgot password" link on the OWIT login page.

US Government Achieves Goal for Women-Owned Businesses
Understanding culture boosts negotiating success globally

Good cross-cultural communication to increase success in negotiating around the world is more than simply memorizing a list of do’s and taboos in different countries. In a recent OWIT webinar, Douglas Cohen, Senior Manager, Global Trade & Contracts, Worldwide Trade & Legal Associates, outlined six cultural dimensions that exist in all countries:

1. Identity – individualistic vs collectivist culture
2. Authority – high vs low level
3. Risk – averse vs acceptable
4. Achievement – cooperation vs competition
5. Time – deadline driven vs relationship building
6. Communication style – direct vs indirect

Understanding how these play out in different cultures is key to negotiating successfully. He explained how they apply to various geographic regions, which he grouped into nine dominant cultural clusters around the world. For example, the South Asian cluster, including countries like India and Vietnam, is cooperative and looks for a win-win…whereas the Germanic cluster (Germany, Switzerland, Austria) is more formal, punctual and competitive.

Among Cohen’s tips for North American businesses negotiating abroad:

* Slow down. Small talk may make a difference.
* Take time for social gatherings to build relationships first.
* Never take yes for an affirmative answer. It can mean different things in other cultures.
* Don’t assume a signed contract is always viewed as binding.
* Have patience. That is power.
